Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Un-healthy Localities, by taking a dose occasion-ally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malarla, Billous attacks, Dizziness, Nau-sea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no in-toxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleep-less at night, take a dose and you will be relieved. Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved

The two most precious things on this side the grave are our reputation and our life. But it is to be lament ed that the most contemptible whisper may deprive us of the one, and the weakest weapon of the other. A wise man, therefore, will be more anxious to deserve a fair name than to possess it, and this will teach him so to live as not to be afraid to die.

POE AND THE ENGLISH POETS. It is particularly irritating to the Americans to be told that, after so many generations of accomplished and vigorous writers, the poetry of Edgar Poe still remains the most individual poetic product to which the United States have given birth. This is annoying, and they escape it by a direct negation-Mr. Henry James, the typical literary American, even venturing to speak of Poe's "very valueless verses," Such men as Mr. James ask us if we are sincere in preferring these light tones of music to the intellectual force and severity of Bryant, to the humanity of Longfellow, to the wit of Holmes and Lowell. To this there seems an answer which will hardly satisfy any but those who have made poetry their principal study. These will have perceived that in the history of the world what has really preserved the memories of writers of verse has not been intellectual force, or the clear expression of love and pity, or even wit, but a certain indefinable felicity of style; a power of saying things as they never were said before, and so that they can never be forgotten. It is a very remarkable thing that Edgar Poe, who was not a man of much weight of character, or even originality of intellect, yet happened to possess, to a very high degree, this extraordinary gift of style. In this no American poet has so much as approached him, and it is probable that this will preserve his verse, like a rose petal in a drop of glycerine, bound to decay because of its ephemeral and disconnected condition, yet never actually decaying.

Here in England, where every unprejudiced thinker must admit that poetry has flourished since the beginning of the century far more than in America, Edgar Poe has taken his place as one of the fashioners of style. Whether his influence has been altogether beneficial may perhaps be a matter of reasonable doubt. But his influence is not to be doubted. Long ago Mr. Tennyson came under the sway of his music: Mr. Matthew Arnold, in the "New Sirens," and Mr. Rosetti, in more than one piece of structural melody, have felt it; Mr. Swinburne, though he has so thoroughly conquered the notes and made them his own, would scarcely have begun as he did without "Ulalume" and the "Conqueror Worm." But the English writer who has most closely resembled Edgar Poe in his mournful and mortuary temper, though he wore his rue with a difference, was the late Mr. Arthur O'Shaughnessy, whose "Fountain of Tears," and "Barcarolle" threw more light on the structure and value of Poe's verses than pages of the cleverest criticism. In France, where the cadence and the verbal felicity were lost, the influence of Poe, which was so strong for a little time, seems to have faded away. We do not hear now of the gentleman who was spending years and years on a translation of "The Raven," and whose version was expected by his friends to be a greater masterpiece than the original Baudelaire's beautiful paraphrases and commentaries, in which he managed, while retaining the essential characteristics of Poe's work, to infuse a strong quality of his own, will always be of interest to students of literature. -Pall Mall Gazette.

KINGSLEY'S WELCOME OF LONG-FELLOW.

When Longfellow made his third visit to Great Britain, in 1868, Charles Kingsley published a poem of welcome in the Times, which found an echo in all the literary and artistic circles of the kingdom. To show how much he was admired then we print the little poem as it appeared:

Welcome to England, thou whose strains prolong The glorious bede-roll of our Saxon song; Ambassador and Pilgrim-Bard in one, Fresh from thy home—the home of Washington, On hearths as sacred as thine own, here stands The loving welcome that thy name commands; Hearths swept for thee and garnished as a shrine By trailing garments of thy Muse divine, Poet of Nature and of Nations, know Thy fair name spans the ocean like a bow, Born from the rain that falls into each life, Kindled by dreams with loveliest fancies rife; A radiant arch that with prismatic dyes Links the two worlds, its keystone in the skies.

DRINKING WATER.

No sensible person need be told that pure water is as essential to good health as pure air, and we can not be too careful of that part of this most necessary article of domestic economy to be used in cooking and fordrinking. Water has an immense absorbing capacity, and the colder it is the greater the facility with which it takes up impure gases. An open vessel of water will render the air of a room purer, but the water itself will, in a few hours, be rendered totally unfit for use by reason of the fact that most all the carbonic-acid gas and am monig, the result of respired gases, is taken up by it. Hence, water for cooking or drinking should, if kept inside, be in tightly-covered vessels. Where well or cistern water is used the better plan is to keep the drinking pail on the Certain it is that no prudent housewife, knowing these facts, will use water that has stood uncovered, for any length of time, in an occupied room. When not forget the important adjunct to comfort and health-pure water.

A REBEL AND ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

About two years ago, just as I was dismissing a party of visitors from the door of the catacomb, a very plain, modest-looking man of middle age approached and said he had come to see and learn all he could about the monument and Lincoln. I proceeded in my usual way, when visitors are much interested, and completed my explanations on the terrace in front of the statue of the President. From the general bearing of the visitor, I should have taken him for a son of an original New England Abolitionist, When I left off speaking he remained and seemed reactant to take his eyes from the statue. After several minutes spent in silent meditation he astonished me by saying, substantially : "I was a soldier in the Confederate army, and spent four years deing my utmost to defeat all that Abraham Lincoln was trying to accomplish, He succeeded, and I have no regrets on that account," The visitor then assumed a tragic attitude, and, raising his right hand t ward the statue, said, with deliberation and emphasis: "He was an infinitelygreater man than George Washington ever was," With his eyes still fixed on the statue, and as though his whole soul was in his words, he continued: "Washington had no difficulty in determining who were his friends and who were not. His enemies were principally on the water, on the other side of it, or officers and soldiers sent here to enforce the mandates of a tyrant. His friends were his neighbors, who, in addition to their struggles for existence in a new country, were oppressed by taxation without representation. The line was clearly drawn from the beginning. With Lincoln it was different. His enemies were in every department of the Government. They filled the civil offices, they commanded his skeleton of an army, they trod the decks of his ships, such as they were. Where they could with impunity be open, they were bold and outspoken. Where it was policy, they were wily, complaisant and cautious. It required two years, or half his first term, to learn who were friends and who were enemies: but he was equal to the emergency. And through it all a little child could approach him with perfect confidence, but the most wily statesman could not swerve him a hair's breadth from what he believed to be right!" That is what I call eulogy, and if the see one. - Custodian Power.

PROGRESS IN AGRICULTURE.

The Committee on Agriculture, to whom had been intrusted the query from Indiana : " Are we advancing in agriculture?" reported that they had spent seven weeks in investigating the matter, and were quite ready to answer in the affirmative. Among other instances of progress in agriculture might be mentioned that of hoeing corn. A dozen years ago the plan was to lean the hoe against a stump in the field and go off fishing. It is now done by giving a chattel mortgage on three steers and hiring a neighbor to do the work. Ten years ago turnips were heaped up in the barn or cellar and supposed to be inum, $115.20; thallium, $108.77; food for only cows and calves. To-day chromium, $58; magnesium, $56.50; they are carefully wrapped in tissue paper, laid in bureau drawers and are con. sidered a fit diet for even a Senator. When wiped off with a dish-cloth and scraped with a butcher knife, they furnish a very bracing and enervating diet. Progress had been made in plowing, dragging, reaping and many other parstudying cleanliness and ventilation do ticulars, and the committee felt safe in saying that the time was not far distant for the same office, but on different tickwhen a farmer could sit in an arm-chair in a lager beer saloon and raise sixty bushels of wheat to the acre. - Proceedings of the Lime Kiln Club.

INHERITED PERILS.

Foremost among the perils of life, in all its stages, but especially in its early. stages, are the inherited. We may safely say that no one is born free from taint of disease, and we may almost say with equal certainty that there is no definaable disease that does not admit of being called hereditary, unless it be accidentally produced. To what is known as specific disease, the disease of diseases; to struma, or scrofula, and its ally, if not the same, tubercular affections; to cancer, to rheumatism and gout, and to alcoholic degeneration, the grand perils of life are mainly due. These are the bases of so many diseases which bear different names; these so modify diseases which may in themselves be distinct, that if they were removed the dangers would be reduced to a minimum. These diseased conditions do not, however, exhaust the list of fatal common inheritances. On many occasions for several years past I have observed and maintained the observation that some diseases, as communicable, infectious or contagious, are also classifiable under and his family. Turner and his associthis head. I am satisfied that quinsy, diphtheria, scarlet fever, and even what is called brain fever, typnoid, are often sufficient force, neither age nor sex of heriditary character. I have known a family in which four members have suf. course. They went from house to house, fered from diphtheria, a parent having massacring the whites, until their num had the same affection, and probably a periods, suffered from typhoid, a parent and a grandparent having been subject of the gang were attacked and scattered. to the same disease. I have known a family in which quinsy has been the marked family characteristic for four generations. These persons have been the sufferers from the diseases named, without any obvious contraction of the diseases, and without having any companions in their sufferings. They were, in fact, predisposed to produce the poisons of the disease in their own bodies, as the cobra is to produce the poisonous secretion, which, in its case, is a part of its natural organization. - Dr. Richardson, in Fraser's Magazine,

So far, good. Sometime in the night there came a succession of terrified shrieks from the room occupied by the Laura B. M., Kaufman,-"I hear a bride and groom, and the clerk, porters and employers generally rushed up stairs, only to meet a frantic female figartists. How is the thing done, and ure, clad all in white, fleeing in desperate haste from her apartment, crying; "Oh, there's a man in my room!"

The clerk rushed in and found the groom, half disrobed, standing in the middle of the floor, one boot on and the ion : They first warmed the plate, then other in his hand, the picture of amazement. He explained that he had just come up stairs and was in the act of uncranberries, dressing (without onions), dressing (his wife having previously retired), when she suddenly awoke with a shriek and fled.

"What was the matter?" asked the "Damfino," replied the husband. Just then the bride, enveloped in huge bed spread, procured for her by chambermaid, came back, looking very red and foolish, and in half a minute she explained the mystery by saying : "Oh, Fred, I forgot I was married and when I awoke I was so frightened.'

THE SOUTHAMPTON INSURRECTION.

The Southampton insurrection startled the people of Virginia in the month of August, 1831. The leader was a slave named Nat Turner. It is said that from childhood he seemed to have been the victim of superstition and fanaticism, and to have grown up in the belief that he was destined to accomplish some great purpose. He was austere in life and manners, and impressed his associates with the conviction that he was a prophet of the Almighty, and that he was guided by inspiration from above. In his confession he related that on May 12, 1828, he had a vision, and a spirit visited him, and commanded him to be ready at a sign to be given in the heavens to rise and slay his enemies. This sign was to be the eclipse in February, 1831. The Fourth of July was the day fixed for the rising, but he fell ill, and that time passed. The sign appeared again, he said, and then he determined to wait no longer. The insurrection began on the night of Aug. 21, by the massacre of his master, Joseph Travis, ates had agreed that, until they could arm and equip themselves and raise a should be spared, and this was their bers were increased to over fifty, all grandparent. I have known a family in mounted and a ned with guns and which five members have, at various swords, axes and bs. Their acts soon aroused the countr and the members Turner's associates deserted him, and he had to conceal himself for several weeks; but he was discovered, captured, tried and executed. It is stated by Wilson that in this insurrection sixty-one white persons and more than 100 slaves were killed or executed.

A HAPPY THOUGHT.

An intimate friend of the late Rev. Dr. J. B. Wakeley tells an amusing anecdote of him, as follows:

The dector was a most inimitable delineator, and fond of a good story. He related to me, with great glee, how he extricated himself once from a most awkward dilemma. Preaching in a Hudson to a congregation of farmers mainly from the text, "If any man draw back my soul hath no pleasure in him," he inadvertently observed, "My brethren, awake looked up at him, and showed by their interest that the minister had never seen two old rams trying to butt each other's brains out. The doctor discovered his mistake as soon as they did, but, not seeing his way out of it, he repeated his statement with greater emphasis. Those of his audience who were awake nudged their sleeping brethren, who, on opening their eyes, looked about to see what had happened. This greatly embarrassed the doctor, and he was now sadly puzzled. He ventured, with still greater emphasis, to repeat the statement, "My brethren, sheep never fight," when luckily he saw his way out, back."-Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magaziae.

STATISTICS show that the people of this country consume about four and onehalf pounds of cheese per capita, while the people of England consume about fourteen pounds per capita annually. The argument that cheese is not a wholesome article of food, it would seem, would not hold good in the light of this fact, as the agricultural classes of England, who are large consumers of cheese, are among the most robust and healthy people of the world.

A GERMAN manufacturer has succeeded in producing serviceable face masks of mica, for the protection of metal and glass melters, stone masons and other workmen exposed to heat, dust and noxious vapors. These masks allow the eyes to be turned in any direction, and there is space enough for spectacles, in case the eyesight is defective.

THE SCHEMING ELEPHANTS.

P. T. Barnum gives this anecdote in a temperance lecture: "Last winter two of my elephants began shaking with chills one morning. The keepers ran down to the village and got six gallons of whisky. Hastily returning, three gallons were given to each elephant. Fortunately it cured them. They liked the artificial warmth it superinduced. Next morning when the keeper came to them he found both elephants shaking with might and main. 'No you don't,' he shouted, 'you are well enough today,' and they stopped shaking."

THE English Gen. Douglas thinks England will live in a state of perpetual scare, as bad as if she was at war, if the channel tunnel is ever made, and warns the brave Briton against boring a hole under the sea that nature has given him for a safeguard.

"Young man, we eat all the rind here," said a boarding-house keeper to a barder who was taking off the outel right," replied the boarder, "1'm cut-

Oh, My Back!

That's a common expression and has a world of meaning. How much suffering is summed up in it.

The singular thing about it is, that pain in the back is occasioned by so many things. May be caused by kidney disease, liver complaint, consumption, cold, rheumatism,dyspepsia,over-work, nervous debility, &c.

Whatever the cause, don't neglect it. Something is wrong and needs prompt attention. No medicine has yet been discovered that will so quickly and surely cure such diseases as BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, and it does this by commencing at the foundation, and making the blood pure and rich.

> Wm. P. Marshall, of Logansport, Indiana, writes :- " My wife has for many years been troubled from pain in her back and general debility incident to her sex. She has taken one bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters. and I can truthfully say that she has been so much benefited that she pronounces it the only remedy of many medicines she has tried."

Leading physicians and clergymen use and recommend Brown's Iron Bit-TERS. It has cured others suffering as you are, and it will cure you.
